To Whom It May Concern,

As a trial lawyer, I have seen the expression of a wide range of human emotion on the faces of juries and witnesses alike when they hear and see the re-enactment and descriptions of past events. Interpreting these emotions can, at times be difficult, as individuals in these groups attempt to veil their emotions for the sake of legitimizing a position taken in their respective role in litigation.

However, having had the fortunate opportunity to be present during renditions of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s speeches by Stephon Ferguson- one in particular at the Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial in Washington, D.C.- it can be stated to the highest degree of certainty that in those forums, interpretation is of no consequence as the expression of emotion on the faces of those in attendance is unmistakably one of awe and amazement. This is understandable, as Mr. Ferguson's likeness to Dr. King in cadence, tone, and delivery is so remarkably similar that you feel as if Dr. King himself is before you, leading and giving you instruction on how to conquer the challenges of the Civil Rights Era.

There are very few instances wherein we can re-live history. Hearing Mr. Ferguson's rendition of Dr. King's speeches is one of them. I highly recommend Mr. Ferguson, as he exudes his dedication to perfecting the craft of embodying the spirit and legacy of Dr. King in every performance.

With Best Regards,

Governor E. Jackson, III
